GEO India 2015

Realising India's Hydrocarbon Potential

It is currently estimated that India has approximately 5.7 billion barrels of proven oil reserves, the second largest amount in the Asia-Pacific region. However domestic oil and gas production levels will have to be increased significantly in order to keep pace with expected increases in energy demand.

The New Exploration Licensing Policy (NELP) has opened up the Indian petroleum sector. This has resulted in much greater involvement of private sector operators and critically, foreign investors. With the majority of the country's sedimentary basins still unexplored, India presents the petroleum industry with a challenging but potentially rewarding opportunity.

GEO India

With the full support of Mr Narendra K Verma, Director (Exploration), Oil & Natural Gas Corporation Ltd, The Association of Petroleum Geologists (APG) and the American Association of Petroleum Geologists (AAPG) will be working together on the GEO India 2015 event. This event will cover all aspects of petroleum geoscience with a highly technical conference programme, a series of workshops, field trips and an exhibition of international significance showcasing petroleum geoscience products and services.
